TO GO OVER 100 MILES AN HOUR-A working model of the record-breaking locomotive, invented and patented by Master Mechanic Jackson Richards, of the Reading railroad, was placed or exhibition yesterday in the hall of the Builders' Exchange, says the Philadelphia Times. A large number of engineers, locomotive experts and others interested in the increase of speed on railroads visited the hall during the day.

Speaking of his invention Mr. Richards said: "If the new engine I am about to construct for exhibition at the World's Fair in Chicago cannot make over 100 miles an hour I will give it away to the first verson I mee. inites an hour I will give it away to the first person I meet.

"I do not claim that this will be the highest rate of speed it will be capable of making, for I believe the speed will be practically unlimited. By that I mean

"I lost in a fearful cataclysm before the dawn of present history."

The woman who hastened into the pantry and returned with the saleratus biscuit for the peripatetic stranger at her gate wore a gingham gown which she had obviously builded with her own hands, says the Detroit Tribune.

"I continued the principle of all the high-speed locomotives of the future.

"I have been working on this invention for over ten years, though the drawings were only completed about the ist of September. After this the patent was applied for, and as soon as it was granted the Gate.

gantic strice to be taken in the matter of high-speed locomotives and it is more than likely that the time between Philadesphia and New York will be decreased to less than an hour. I intend to make the first trial trup between this city and Chicago with the engine I will have built for the World's Fair.

"In outward appearance the new locomotive will not differ insterially from the speedy one now used by our Company between this city and New York. The driving-wheel will be a trifle larger, being 6 feet high in place of 5 feet 8 inches, as at present, and the ongine will weigh fifty tons, a small increase over the present weight. The peculiarity of construction lies in the fact that instead of the two cylinders as now used there will be four.

"One cylinder will be located on each side of the locomotive frame, as at present, and the located on each side of the locomotive frame, as at present,

One cylinder will be located on each side of the locomotive frame, as at present, and the other two will be cast on what is known as the cylinder saddle. The inside cylinders are to be cast in one piece and will be horizontal to the outside ones. The four cylinders will entirely overcome what is known to engineers as the dead centre and the engine will be perfectly balanced without any counterbalance in the driving wheels. This latter improvement will be the means of saving from 30 to 50 per cent, of the present weer and tear on the roadbed, as it will do away with the vicious pounding which has proved so destructive to modern road-beds. eds. . The engine will glide smoothly and

POLLY RANG THE BELL,

We had moved into a newly built house which had all the modern improvements, the electric bell being one of them, says a writer in the Chicago Aesz.

At the time I am about to relate it was a cold Winter's night. Mr. and Mrs. J. were travelling in Europe and the servants were all gathered about the servants were all gathered about the kitchen fire. Poliy was also near the fire, but in the dining room, which was upset as the servants to enter and, like a clever shord, studied on this for a long while.

On this night Polly was alone, when, was addenly the door opened and two men entered. The room being dark, they search.
